JAKARTA FOUR SEASONS RESIDENCES

The Jakarta Four Seasons Residences was the first project to receive an exclusive license from Four Seasons to develop signature condominiums. Four towers were built, and two of them were finished. Five years later the developer engaged Darcy Bonner & Associates to bring the remaining two towers, already standing and glazed with outdated windows, to a far more modern level: a new exterior skin with new windows, new floor plans throughout and a new lobby. Darcy Bonner counts it among the studio's important projects. The images show a residence high above the city, its living room shaped by a sinuous ceiling cove, a round column clad in gray stone and a screen of translucent panels between the living room and the open kitchen.

Furniture and finishes are calm and tactile: a long blue sofa, a sculptural metal table, pale rugs and a long dining table beside a grand piano. The principal bedroom looks out through full-height glass, and the bath is clad in strongly veined stone, with a freestanding tub set before the window.

A sketch elevation and section of the new main lobby, drawn by the studio in 2016, follows the arrival sequence from a canopied drop-off into a lofty entrance hall. Figures and a waiting car at the entrance measure the double-height space, and the sheet shows that the design reached beyond the residences to the public spaces of the building.
