ST. REGIS PENTHOUSE

The St. Regis Penthouse is a 7,000 square foot full-floor residence on the 90th floor of the St. Regis Tower, overlooking a never-ending 360-degree horizon. Here curves, concealed light and a narrow range of pale and dark materials do the work that molding and ornament do in a traditional room.

In the living room, a long wall wrapped in a woven, horizontally textured covering bends around the corner of the plan, and a flush door disappears into its surface. A continuous cove of indirect light follows the same curve overhead, leading past a rounded enclosure of glossy figured wood toward the windows. A curved Mattaliano sectional, a free-form wood table and a chandelier by Achille Salvagni complete a room arranged for the view, with the kitchen and its dark stone island beyond.

Throughout, the palette holds to ivory, warm gray, dark wood and bronze.

The dining room places a long wood table beneath a branching chandelier of glass globes, with glass-fronted wine storage along one wall. In the principal bedroom, upholstered panels line the wall behind the bed, a tall panel opens to the dressing room, and shelving of figured wood rises above a linear fireplace. Throughout, the palette holds to ivory, warm gray, dark wood and bronze.
